Introduction

Press freedom in Europe is more fragile now than at any time since the end of the Cold War. Journalists increasingly face obstruction, hostility and violence as they investigate and report on behalf of the public. Urgent actions backed by a determined show of political will by Council of Europe member states are now required to improve the dire conditions for media freedom and to provide reliable protections for journalists in law and practice.

■ The 2019 Annual Report by the partner organisations of the Council of Europe's Platform for the Protection of Journalism and Safety of Journalists provides a clear picture of the worsening environment for the media across Europe, and its underlying causes¹.

■ The 12 partners, including journalists' and media organisations as well as freedom of expression advocacy groups, reported 140 serious violations in 32 Council of Europe member states to the Platform in 2018. The Platform was launched in April 2015 to provide information which may serve as a basis for dialogue with member states about possible protective or remedial action.

■ The Annual Report paints a disturbing picture. Impunity routinely protects those responsible for violent crimes who deliberately target journalists for their work. Legal protections have been progressively weakened and denied. The space for the press to hold government authorities and the powerful to account has been diminished.

■ In addition to providing an overview of the urgent threats to media freedom identified in 2018, the Annual Report also takes an in-depth look at particular issues or country contexts that individual partner organisations have identified as especially salient during the past year. These include the situation

1. This report represents a joint effort by the 12 partner organisations to the Platform to raise awareness about key developments related to press freedom in the Council of Europe region highlighted by the alerts. Different sections have been contributed by different organisations. Each Partner Organisation reserves the right to make its own assessment of any particular issues or case, including those that are referenced in this text.

in Turkey, which remains the world's biggest jailer of journalists; the Russian Federation, where state actions and policies continue to severely restrict the space for free expression; Italy, the state which saw the sharpest increase in the number of media freedom alerts reported in 2018; and Hungary, in the light of the very high concentration of media in the hands of pro-government oligarchs. The report also assesses disturbing new trends, including impunity for journalists' murders inside the European Union (EU) as well as elsewhere; attacks on freelance journalists; and efforts to undermine the independence of public service media, including in countries once considered "safe harbours" for such media.

■ In the spirit of cooperation of the 2015 Memorandum of Understanding signed by the partner organisations and the Council of Europe, we call on member states to urgently take account of the findings and recommendations presented here. We ask them urgently to take all measures necessary to create a favourable environment for free and independent media and to end the many acts of violence, harassment and intimidation which journalists face as a daily reality in some member states.

Significant features of the assault on press freedom in the Council of Europe region

Ján Kuciak and Jamal Khashoggi were killed in retaliation for their work.

The number of attacks on journalists' physical safety and integrity is growing.

- ▶ At least two journalists were killed in 2018 in relation to their journalistic work: Ján Kuciak in Slovakia², and Jamal Khashoggi (after entering the Saudi Arabian consulate) in Turkey³. In the deaths of two other journalists, Viktoria Marinova in Bulgaria⁴ and Maksim Borodin in the Russian Federation⁵, questions and concerns have been raised over the thoroughness of the respective police investigations or around the circumstances which led to the murder.
- ▶ Overall, 35 alerts regarding attacks on journalists' physical safety and integrity were posted on the Platform in 2018, confirming an upward trend in the number of attacks. Of these, 29 are classified as "level 1", which covers the most severe and damaging violations to media freedom. In addition to the killings noted above, the alerts include the detonation of a car bomb in front of a journalist's home⁶; a knife attack on a journalist in front of his apartment door⁷; an arson attack against the headquarters of an investigative news website⁸; and the ramming of a van into a building housing a major national newspaper⁹.

The number of recorded threats, including death threats, doubled in 2018.

- ▶ The number of alerts about serious threats to journalists' lives has sharply increased, almost doubling on an annual basis, since the launch of the Platform in 2015. Notably, 2018 saw a clear trend towards verbal abuse and public stigmatisation of the media and individual journalists in many member states, including by elected officials and especially in the run-up to elections. Such actions, which are frequently propagated over social media, brand media workers as potential targets, in some instances triggering hostility, hate and violent actions against them¹⁰. This is unacceptable and must be vigorously condemned. Worryingly, the Platform alerts highlight cases where authorities have failed to adequately respond to journalists' complaints¹¹. Examples of verbal abuse by political leaders in 2018 include voicing regret that journalists were not yet "an extinct species"¹², publishing lists of journalists who dared to be critical of the government and describing them as "traitors"¹³, and making threats to reduce sources of public funding to the press on the ground that it "pollutes public debate ... with public money"¹⁴.

Impunity – the lack of proper police and judicial follow-up to crimes against journalists – has been allowed to become a "new normal".

- ▶ The Platform details 17 long-standing cases of impunity for the murder of journalists – a disturbing indication of how state authorities often fail to fulfil their strict obligation under Article 10 (freedom of expression) of the European Convention of Human Rights to conduct prompt and effective investigations and bring those responsible to justice. To highlight this deplorable lack of progress, the Platform launched a special page on impunity for murder cases.
- ▶ Three new alerts¹⁵ were submitted in 2018 on impunity for serious crimes against journalists. None of the previous alerts relating to impunity for murdered journalists have seen significant progress.
- ▶ The Platform provides ample evidence of failings, unexplained delays and omissions in domestic investigations which point to a lack of political will by member states to bring the perpetrators and masterminds of these crimes to justice. They also reveal failings related to inadequate legal frameworks, a lack of judicial independence or capacity, and negligence or corruption.

At the end of 2018, the Platform recorded 130 journalists in detention in the member states of the Council of Europe.

Journalists continue to be arbitrarily and unjustly detained or jailed.

- ▶ As of 31 December 2018, the Platform recorded 130 cases of journalists in detention. This figure includes 110 journalists jailed in Turkey, 11 in Azerbaijan, five in the Russian Federation and four in Ukraine.
- ▶ In 2018 several alerts concerned alleged abuse of the Interpol "Red Notice" system by some member states¹⁶ to pursue journalists who had moved abroad to avoid domestic repression and the threat of arbitrary imprisonment.

Repressive legislation is seriously eroding media freedom.

- ▶ Ten new alerts on problematic legislative or administrative measures were reported in eight member states in 2018¹⁷. They include the closure or banning of media outlets by decree¹⁸; new legislation allowing the blocking of Internet sites on national security grounds without independent oversight¹⁹; rules requiring foreign-funded media outlets to register as “foreign agents”²⁰; a bill that would criminalise the viewing of certain online content and publishing certain pictures or video clips; and measures that potentially criminalise the legitimate work of journalists reporting on terrorism issues²¹.

States seek to block Internet sites and social media platforms.

- ▶ In 2018, the Platform recorded three alerts in two member states concerning unnecessary or disproportionate control of online communications and access to information²². Although this figure remained stable in comparison to previous years²³, the implications of the acts highlighted by the alerts are significant. The Russian authorities, for example²⁴, restricted access to the Telegram messaging app as well as to a large number of news portals, causing massive temporary Internet disruption. Almost 20 million Internet protocol addresses were temporarily blocked, including at least six media outlets. Notably, none of the alerts previously submitted to the Platform regarding the arbitrary blocking of Internet or social media in various member states²⁵ has been declared “resolved” or “showing progress” in 2018.

The independence and sustainability of public broadcasters is being increasingly undermined.

- ▶ Adequate financing is essential to ensuring the independence and sustainability of public service media (PSM). In 2018, alerts to the Platform confirm a trend of cuts to PSM funding in several Council of Europe member states and highlight political interference in the work of PSM supervisory boards²⁶. In general, the alerts bore witness to a marked trend towards increased political pressure on public broadcasters, making it difficult for reporters and editors to exercise editorial independence.

Journalists’ ability to protect sources is in jeopardy.

- ▶ The 2018 alerts show a clear deterioration regarding the protection of journalistic sources. In several member states, administrative authorities filed requests aimed at disclosure of information identifying journalistic sources without any judicial involvement²⁷. Raids were carried out at newspapers’ premises and at journalists’ homes²⁸. Police confiscated mobile phones belonging to investigative journalists²⁹. Judicial decisions granted public prosecutors access to journalists' phone records³⁰.

- ▶ In addition, legislative moves by several member states³¹ to assume more extensive powers for mass surveillance have created grave risks to journalists' rights including the protection of confidential sources. None of the alerts posted on the Platform regarding such legislative initiatives have been declared "resolved" or showing progress.

Laws that threaten to criminalise journalists' work continue to exert a major chilling effect.

- ▶ Defamation still carries a risk of imprisonment in more than half of the Council of Europe member states³², running counter to the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR). Despite some progress, such as Malta's decision to repeal its criminal defamation law, the 2018 alerts show that this risk remains real, with journalists facing jail sentences for defamation³³ or for insults to the head of State³⁴. Journalists continued to be sued by government officials for defamation³⁵, despite the fact that public officials and politicians must display a greater degree of tolerance toward criticism. In Malta³⁶, over 30 defamation lawsuits against murdered journalist Daphne Caruana Galizia before her death remain pending; the continued pursuit of many of those cases by the plaintiffs, including government officials, illustrates a deep structural injustice.

Are member states responding to alerts adequately in terms of the Council of Europe's agreement with the partner organisations?

In 2018, the rate of response to alerts from states was 39%.

The overall response rate from states after serious and verified threats to media freedom were reported to the Platform in 2018 was only 39%, a level which is much too low. Relatively few state replies have so far led to genuine remedial actions or to necessary reforms of laws and practices. More evidence of efforts to resolve problems is essential in order to bring about real improvements in the protections for media freedom in the Council of Europe area.

- ▶ Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Italy, Russian Federation and Turkey did not respond to any alerts in 2018.
- ▶ Some member states took significant steps to reply effectively by creating domestic mechanisms to respond to alerts. France established an inter-ministerial working group to coordinate responses, composed of representatives of the Permanent Representation of France to the Council of Europe and the Ministries of Interior, Justice and of Culture. Ukraine's Ministry of Information Policy has also put in place a system to coordinate responses to alerts, and several other countries have signalled their intention to follow suit. Such moves are an important step towards better transparency and accountability for handling Platform alerts.
- ▶ The problems or cases raised in a number of alerts have been adequately resolved, including individual cases in Belgium, Bulgaria, France, Georgia, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Montenegro, Netherlands, Poland, Serbia, Slovenia, Spain, Turkey and Ukraine.

36. Platform alert, "Malta Economy Minister Issues four Libel Suits and Warrants against Blogger Daphne Caruana Galizia", posted 10 February 2017, replied 16 February and 17 November 2017.

- ▶ Constructive measures were adopted in several member states to strengthen frameworks of protection for journalists under threat. Following several shocking assaults against crime reporters and media offices in the Netherlands, for instance, the public prosecution, the police authorities and media outlets concluded an agreement to adopt preventive measures and coordinate responses to instances of violence.
- ▶ The Platform partners welcome every prompt and constructive reply by member states to alerts, and applaud steps by some member states to put in place new organisational arrangements to ensure adequate responses.

Impunity

■ In 2016, a turning point was reached when the governments of the 47 Council of Europe member states declared in the Committee of Ministers' Recommendation CM/Rec\(2016\)4³⁷ that the scale and severity of attacks, threats and harassment against journalists and other media actors across Europe was "unacceptable". They stressed that, in view of the damaging effects on the functioning of democratic society, far-reaching measures were needed to strengthen protections and to eradicate impunity. In the Ministers' words, abuses and crimes committed against media workers, which in practice are committed by both state and non-state actors, "are often met with insufficient efforts by relevant state authorities to bring the perpetrators to justice, which leads to a culture of impunity and can fuel further threats and violence, and undermine public trust in the law". Yet the situation has still not improved.

■ Impunity means the failure by state authorities to identify, prosecute and punish all those, including the assailants and masterminds, responsible for crimes of violence against journalists. It is a pernicious offence and a betrayal of trust by public officials. Impunity gives rise to a suspicion of official collusion in or tolerance of unlawful acts and undermines public confidence in the authorities' maintenance of the rule of law. Several judgments by the ECtHR have established³⁸ that states must fulfil "positive obligations" to carry out effective investigations following the killing or disappearance of a journalist.

37. Recommendation CM/Rec\(2016\)4 on the protection of journalism and the safety of journalists and other media actors, 13 April 2016.

In 2018 there were 17 individual cases of impunity for murders of journalists.

■ In 2018 there were 26 impunity alerts on the Platform, including 17 individual cases of impunity for murders of journalists. Two of those murders took place in Azerbaijan, one in Montenegro, six in the Russian Federation, one in Serbia, two in Turkey and five in Ukraine. In addition, a separate impunity alert³⁹ on Serbia, published in August 2018, identifies 14 more cases of killings, kidnappings and disappearances of Serbian and Albanian journalists between 1988 and 2005 that remain unresolved and which require renewed and independent investigations by the relevant state authorities.

■ The total number of unsolved journalists' murders and disappearances in the Council of Europe area is unquestionably higher still, but the Platform records only those which have been submitted by the partner organisations since 2015. The 17 individual unsolved cases date back to murders that took place between three and 24 years ago. In most cases no progress at all has been apparent towards justice for the victims' families. The most long-standing case is that of Dada Vujasinović⁴⁰, a Serbian reporter who was shot dead in Belgrade in 1994. In 2018 the partner organisations registered an additional impunity case related to the killing of Naji Jerf⁴¹, a Syrian journalist and filmmaker who was gunned down by unknown assailants in Gaziantep in south eastern Turkey in 2015. He had made documentaries about human rights abuses by the Syrian government and the Daesh group.

■ ECtHR rulings in landmark cases provide insights into patterns of behaviour on the part of law-enforcement and judicial authorities which are characteristic of a "culture" or "climate" of impunity⁴². These include *Gongadze v. Ukraine*⁴³, in which the Court found that that the Ukrainian authorities ought to have been aware of the vulnerable position of the journalist Georgiy Gongadze, who covered politically sensitive topics and was murdered in 2000 outside Kyiv; it found Ukraine in violation of Article 2 (right to life) of the European Convention on Human Rights for failing to conduct an effective investigation; in *Dink v. Turkey*⁴⁴, the Court found similar patterns of behaviour by Turkish law-enforcement officials in the case of the murder in 2007 of the prominent Armenian-Turkish editor and journalist Hrant Dink; and in a July 2018 ruling the ECtHR found⁴⁵ that the Russian Federation had "failed to take adequate investigatory steps to find the person or persons who had commissioned the murder" of investigative journalist Anna Politkovskaya.

A climate of impunity has started to take hold in parts of Europe.

■ Three new alerts⁴⁶ were submitted in 2018 with regard to impunity for other serious attacks against journalists, and five alerts previously submitted to the Platform under "physical attacks" were moved into the impunity category because of the lack of progress in investigations after the passage of two or more years since the crimes were committed. Among the cases of unresolved violent assaults are those of website editor Marjan Stamenkovski⁴⁷, who suffered head injuries after being attacked in 2015 by a gang in "the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia", and Serbian investigative journalist Ivan Ninić⁴⁸, who was viciously beaten, also in 2015. Other impunity cases on the Platform relate to failure of the authorities to investigate police officers accused of targeting journalists with unnecessary violence during public protests in Armenia in 2014⁴⁹ and the unresolved case of Greek journalist Demitrios Perros⁵⁰, who was badly injured when he was assaulted while covering a public protest in Athens in 2016.

■ The partner organisations are acutely concerned that a climate of impunity has started to take hold in parts of Europe, as evidenced by the poor record of some Council of Europe member states in investigating and punishing crimes of violence and other serious crimes against journalists. The partner organisations are especially alarmed by the lack of substantial progress in identifying and bringing to justice the instigators or masterminds of recent murders and suspected murders of journalists in the Council of Europe area, including those in 2018 of Jamal Khashoggi in Turkey⁵¹ and Ján Kuciak and his fiancée Martina Kušnírová in Slovakia⁵²; in 2017 of Daphne Caruana Galizia in Malta⁵³; and in 2016 of Pavel Sheremet in Ukraine⁵⁴. The partner organisations also note doubts raised about the thoroughness of the investigations into the 2018 murder of Viktoria Marinova in Bulgaria⁵⁵ and the 2018 death of the Russian journalist Maksim Borodin in the Russian Federation⁵⁶, which police have declared a suicide without fully investigating the available evidence. The swift completion of transparent and effective investigations and prosecutions leading to the punishment of all those found responsible, as well as other unsolved killings of journalists, is essential if public trust in states' commitment to protecting the safety of journalists and the rule of law is to be restored.

Turkey

■ As of 31 December 2018, there were 92 active alerts on Turkey, including 110 cases of journalists in detention⁵⁷. 14 new alerts were submitted to the Platform in 2018 and Turkey has not replied to any of these alerts.

■ In 2018, journalists in Turkey continued to face extraordinary repression. Despite the official ending of the state of emergency in July 2018, Turkey remains the world's largest prisoner of journalists and has been rated as one of the worst performers in the world in terms of freedom of expression and media freedom⁵⁸.

In Turkey, over 200 journalists have been arrested or detained on account of their publications.

■ Since the attempted coup of July 2016, and under the state of emergency which was imposed thereafter, over 200 journalists have been arrested or detained on account of their publications⁵⁹. Arrests of journalists and media workers continued throughout 2018, in particular in the south east of the country.

■ The majority of arrested journalists face charges of membership in or propaganda of various groups considered terrorist organisations by the Turkish government, including the so-called FETÖ movement or the PKK. The broad interpretation of the concept of terrorist propaganda, including in cases concerning journalists where there was no incitement to violence, has been repeatedly denounced, including by the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights⁶⁰.

■ The use of prolonged solitary confinement against detained journalists is another issue, with journalists including Deniz Yücel⁶¹ and Nedim Türfent⁶² spending months alone, treatment tantamount to torture under ECtHR case-law⁶³. Evidence obtained through torture has also been deemed admissible by judges in trials against journalists⁶⁴.

to interference with its independence and indicating a grave violation of the rule of law⁷³.

■ In March 2018, the ECtHR announced judgments on applications filed on behalf of Mehmet Altan⁷⁴ and Şahin Alpay⁷⁵. The Court found that there had been violation of Article 5(1) (right to liberty and security) and Article 10 (freedom of expression) of the European Convention on Human Rights. Alpay had already been conditionally released on 16 March. Mehmet Altan remained in detention until 27 June. Both were conditionally freed, and placed under house arrest and travel ban. Verdicts on eight further cases of journalists in Turkey, granted priority status by the ECtHR, are still pending.

Journalists' murders highlight rising threats to the rule of law within the EU

■ The murders of Daphne Caruana Galizia in Malta in 2017⁷⁶ and of Ján Kuciak and his fiancée in Slovakia in 2018⁷⁷ have dramatically raised public and official awareness in the EU of the twin crisis of journalist safety and impunity that has already taken root within the bloc as well as in other parts of the Council of Europe area.

■ In 2018, verdicts in the form of lengthy prison sentences were handed down in the first major mass criminal proceedings against journalists on terrorism-related charges under the state of emergency: *Cumhuriyet*⁶⁵; Ahmet and Mehmet Altan⁶⁶, Nazlı Ilıcak⁶⁷; and *Zaman*⁶⁸. The cases were characterised by gross violations of the journalists' rights to liberty, a fair trial and freedom of expression. These trials illustrated the almost complete collapse of the rule of law in Turkey and highlighted major concerns relating to the role of the judiciary, its independence and relationship with the prosecution, lack of sufficient access to defence lawyers during pre-trial detention and during the trials themselves, insufficient pre-trial disclosure and lack of sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case to warrant continued detention and prosecution. The verdicts were met with a global outcry⁶⁹.

■ In January 2018, the Constitutional Court of Turkey ruled⁷⁰ that the fundamental rights of journalists Mehmet Altan and Şahin Alpay had been violated by their detention and that the two journalists should be released from custody. Despite the judgment, criminal courts⁷¹ rejected the journalists' request to be freed. Şahin Alpay was later released from pre-trial detention after a second judgment of the Constitutional Court⁷², which concluded that his rights had been violated due to the non-implementation of the previous judgment, but the criminal courts refused to release Mehmet Altan.

■ Under Article 153 of the Turkish Constitution, all Constitutional Court rulings enter into force immediately and are binding for the legislative, executive and judicial organs, including the administration and officials. In Caruana Galizia's case, there has been a lack of credible indications that the authorities are diligently investigating who planned and commissioned the killing.

■ Caruana Galizia was killed by a car bomb that exploded near her home in Bidnija, Malta on 16 October 2017. Three suspects were detained on 4 December 2017, but there has been a notable lack of credible indications that the authorities are diligently investigating who planned and commissioned the killing. That task calls for a thorough and impartial examination of leads arising from the journalist's reporting on high-level financial crimes and other forms of wrongdoing, which often implicated leading political and business figures.

Slovak investigative journalist Ján Kuciak and his fiancée, Martina Kušnírová, were found dead from gunshot wounds in their house in Veľká Mača.

■ On 25 February 2018, Slovak investigative journalist Ján Kuciak and his fiancée, Martina Kušnírová, were found dead from gunshot wounds in Kuciak's house in Veľká Mača, some 50 kilometres from Bratislava. At the time of his death, Kuciak had been collecting records on potential embezzlement of EU funds and suspected tax fraud linked to the construction of a luxury apartment complex in Bratislava.

■ In July 2018, the country's General Prosecutor acknowledged that costly but unspecified "mistakes" had negatively affected the early stage of the investigation into the killings. On 28 September, the Slovak police arrested three individuals. Four people were later charged with the couple's murder. Soon afterwards local journalists told visiting members of the European Parliament that there was renewed confidence in the investigation. However, at the time of writing, the individuals who planned and paid for the attack have not been identified or charged.

■ The EU and its member states must live up to their public commitments to safeguard media freedom and the safety of journalists, particularly when it comes to journalists such as Kuciak and Caruana Galizia, who reported extensively on allegations of financial wrongdoing that relate directly to the EU's interests and/or competences, including the sale of EU citizenship, the embezzlement of agricultural subsidies, and cross-border fraud and money laundering. The Platform welcomes the important role of the European Parliament's Rule of Law Monitoring Group as well as the Council of Europe's

Special Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly to Malta, Pieter Omtzigt⁷⁸, in seeking to bring further international scrutiny to the cases in Slovakia and Malta.

Italy

■ Italy is among the countries with the highest number of alerts posted on the Platform in 2018. Thirteen alerts focused on Italy, the same number as in the Russian Federation.

■ This figure shows how press freedom clearly deteriorated in Italy in 2018: the number of violations in Italy reported to the Platform more than tripled compared to 2017.

Italy is the EU member state with the highest number of active threats on the Platform.

■ Italy is also the EU member state with the highest number of active threats on the Platform, a total of 19. Since June 2017, the Italian authorities have not responded to any of the alerts posted on the Platform.

■ The growing violence against journalists in Italy is particularly worrying. Mafia and organised crime remain one of the biggest threats of journalists. In 2018, the Platform recorded three cases of journalists facing death threats⁷⁹, and it includes a number of active alerts on attacks and violence on journalists. Twenty one Italian reporters threatened by the mafia live under permanent police protection. In addition, several journalists have been intimidated and attacked by members of neo-fascist groups⁸⁰.

■ The majority of alerts recorded in 2018 have been submitted after the official installation of the new coalition government on 1 June. The government's two deputy prime ministers, Luigi Di Maio and Matteo Salvini, regularly express through social media rhetoric particularly hostile to the media and journalists.

78. See e.g. Parliamentary Assembly Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, "Daphne Caruana Galizia's assassination and the rule of law, in Malta and beyond: ensuring that the whole truth emerges", Introductory memorandum by Mr Pieter Omtzigt, Rapporteur, Doc. AS/Jur (2018)30, 20 June 2018.

80. Platform alert, "Neo-fascist Threats against Journalist Paolo Berizzi", posted 2 November 2018.

■ Among other things, Deputy Prime Minister Salvini has threatened to remove police protection for investigative journalist Roberto Saviano⁸¹, despite the known threats to his life from criminal organisations. Deputy Prime Minister Di Maio has insulted journalists and initiated a policy of abolition of public subsidies to the press⁸².

■ According to the Italian Federation of Journalists' Unions, media professionals now face a new threat in the country: a constant risk of violence fuelled by the hostile rhetoric of members of the government and the ruling coalition parties.

Russian Federation

■ The thirteen alerts on threats to media freedom in the Russian Federation in 2018 show that independent journalists and bloggers face intense physical, legal and financial pressures, as well as violations of their fundamental rights, marked often by impunity. The authorities have routinely failed to take remedial actions to prevent violence against journalists, including murders, physical attacks and threats, thereby enabling a climate of impunity that encourages further attacks. The alerts further shed light on the Russian authorities' increasing control over the flow of information, which severely restricts the rights to freedom of expression, opinion and information.

■ On 15 April 2018, Maksim Borodin⁸³, an investigative correspondent for the independent news website Novy Den, died after falling from the balcony of his fifth-floor apartment. His reporting on local corruption, prisons and the involvement of Russian private military contractors in Syria had gained national attention in the weeks prior to his death. On 17 April, Novaya Gazeta quoted Novy Den's editor-in-chief, Polina Rummyantseva, stating that Borodin contacted her three days prior to his shocking death saying that he detected surveillance both of the website's office and of himself personally⁸⁴. Rummyantseva had encouraged Borodin to report this to the police but the authorities were never contacted, she said. Despite such circumstantial evidence, and without performing due diligence by thoroughly investigating suspected connections with his reporting, the Russian authorities stated that Borodin's death was suicide.

Bills signed into law in 2018 provide the Russian authorities with additional tools to restrict access to information, carry out surveillance and censor content.

■ Proposed legislation and bills signed into law in 2018 provide the Russian authorities with additional tools to restrict access to information, carry out surveillance and censor content. The state regulator's attempts to block the application *Telegram*⁸⁵ in April 2018 resulted in extensive arbitrary restrictions of freedom of expression and access to information, including mass collateral website blocking. An especially alarming development was the adoption by the Russian parliament of a law⁸⁶ to extend the status of "foreign agent" to media outlets, individual journalists and other writers who publish information online and receive any kind of financial or other assets from abroad, creating a further chilling effect on freedom of expression and access to information.

■ The Constitution of the Russian Federation enshrines the rights to freedom of expression and privacy and prohibits censorship. As a state party to the European Convention on Human Rights, the Russian Federation has obligations to respect, protect and fulfil the right to freedom of expression. The Platform partners call on the Russian authorities to repeal or amend laws stifling free expression, to prevent and protect against threats and violence against journalists, media workers, human rights defenders and activists, and to end impunity for such crimes.

Hungary

■ The three alerts submitted on Hungary in 2018 illustrate the authorities' progressive capture of the media landscape and its impact on media freedom.

Government exerts de facto control over most of the country's media.

■ As a result of Prime Minister Viktor Orbán's extensive reshaping of the media landscape since coming to power in 2010, the Hungarian government exerts sway over most of the country's media. The few independent outlets that remain face a host of obstacles, including lack of advertising revenue, a restrictive regulatory environment, and public campaigns to discredit independent journalists. In 2018, prominent investigative journalist András Dezső⁸⁷ faced a possible three-year prison sentence on charges of misusing sensitive personal information in a case that rights groups believed was linked to his independent reporting. He was let off with a reprimand in November. Meanwhile, Hungarian government spokesperson Zoltán Kovács continued to verbally attack Lili Bayer⁸⁸, a Politico correspondent, on social media and blog posts.

■ The structure and production of state and public news media in Hungary are strongly centralised and pro-governmental. Media coverage of the 8 April parliamentary elections was highly polarised and lacked critical debate, and the campaign was marked “by a pervasive overlap between state and ruling party resources, undermining contestants’ ability to compete on an equal basis”⁸⁹. In November 2018, the owners of the vast majority of Hungary’s pro-government media outlets announced that they were “donating” their companies to a foundation, creating a huge right-wing media conglomerate under the direction of a close ally of Prime Minister Orbán⁹⁰. The lack of transparency in the setting up of the foundation and the fact that the terms of the transfer of assets were exempted from external scrutiny, and cannot even be challenged by the Hungarian Competition Authority, has intensified concerns over media pluralism in the country. Two commercial radio stations were threatened with closure after the Media Council declined to extend their broadcasting license, amidst allegations of discrimination against outlets that are critical of the ruling Fidesz party⁹¹.

■ The Platform partners call on the Hungarian authorities to respect, protect and promote freedom of the press, and to this end, to revise the country’s laws and practices to create an environment in which the media can function free from undue government influence and interference.

Freelancers

■ News media around the world increasingly rely on freelance journalists, fixers, photographers and video journalists for their stories and coverage. But as most freelancers work without the back-up, training and support provided to their staff colleagues, they are especially vulnerable to repression, abuse and arbitrary treatment, including judicial harassment.

Serious threats and obstructions affecting freelance journalists included physical assaults by far-right groups and vicious smear campaigns.

■ Criminal charges, travel bans, smear campaigns and the denial of press accreditation are among the forms of harassment that freelance journalists are confronted with across the Council of Europe area. Serious threats and obstructions affecting freelance journalists registered in alerts to the Platform in 2018 included physical assaults by far-right groups and vicious online smear campaigns.

■ On 18 November 2018, two Ukrainian and one Canadian freelance journalists were violently attacked in Kyiv by right-wing groups participating in a counter-rally on Transgender Commemoration Day⁹². According to the police, an investigation was opened into the attack on the Canadian freelance journalist, Michael Colborne. However, the authorities seemed less willing to investigate the attacks on the Ukrainian freelancers. Margareta Bondari, a freelancer working with Spilka magazine, was attacked by three men when she was leaving the site and was injured by pepper spray. Following the incident, she was targeted online by Yevgen Karas, the leader of the S14 ultra-right group. Bogdan Aminov, a freelancer working with Newsonet TV channel, was also attacked and says his official complaint to the police has not been investigated.

92. Platform alert, “Journalists Attacked by Far-right Radicals”, posted 30 November 2018.

■ In 2019, the Platform will introduce enhancements to its alert-logging system to allow partner organisations to better track, log and share information about serious threats to the safety and rights of freelance journalists. Member states are urged to take all appropriate measures to safeguard the rights of freelance journalists in order to prevent discrimination and unjust treatment.

Public service under attack all over Europe

■ In 2018, several countries that had been considered “safe harbours” for public service media (PSM) became places where it is under significant threat. Three principal means were used to weaken the independence of PSM in the Council of Europe region: reducing resources, restricting the outlet’s mission, and enacting new legislation or regulations.

Three principal means were used to weaken the independence of PSM in the Council of Europe region: reducing resources, restricting the outlet’s mission, and enacting new legislation or regulations.

■ A blatant case of attack through the shrinking of resources⁹³ happened in Ukraine, where the new national public service broadcaster, UA:PBC, became operational in 2017. On 23 November, the parliament adopted a budget that assigned UA:PBC a sum of 1.005 billion Ukrainian Hryvni (UAH) for 2019, amounting to only 57% of the sum guaranteed by law and thus falling short of legal obligations for the second consecutive year. This amount was further reduced to 805 million UAH after debt payments. The budget trimming has obliged UA:PBC to reduce the reach of its coverage in parts of the country and to switch off analogue transmission. The problem of insufficient financial resources for PSM is also exemplified by alerts on Romania⁹⁴ and on Bosnia and Herzegovina⁹⁵.

■ With regard to the restriction of PSM mandates, a most worrying case in 2018 occurred in Denmark⁹⁶, where the centre-right governing coalition, which relies on the external support of a right-wing populist party to pass legislation, imposed a new Contract of Service on DR, the national PSM. The new contract includes a number of restrictions to the PSM’s mandate and additional costs. Among other obligations, DR had to substantially limit its presence in the digital world, provide its programmes (at a price) to competitors for online use and reduce investment in sports rights. Another decision was to abolish the license fee and replace it with a direct contribution from the state budget, which exposes the PSM to the risk of politically-motivated funding decisions and a nearly 25% cut, within three years, of its funds. In September 2018, DR announced the closing of three radio and three TV channels and the laying off of around 400 staff. In the next five years DR will have to cut around 100 million euros from its budget.

■ Reducing independence via changes in legislation or regulation is the most common way to exert political interference over PSM, especially when governments wish to replace managers appointed by their predecessors.

■ In Lithuania⁹⁷, an enquiry was launched in Parliament about supposed misuse of public funding by the national broadcaster. In parallel, changes were made to the system of appointing its governing board which appears to lack safeguards against political influence⁹⁸. Similar problems, on a smaller scale, also occurred this year in certain established democracies, such as Luxembourg⁹⁹, where the director general of the country’s only PSM (Radio

Trade union representatives complained that the move was provoked by government interference and anomalies in the current system of regulation and supervision that allow undue official pressure on the director general and the radio's journalists in order to obtain preferential news treatment.

■ The presence in this report of Denmark, Luxembourg and Switzerland¹⁰⁰ – three countries with long-standing democratic traditions – is another indication that media freedom, independence and pluralism is under growing pressure almost everywhere.

Statistical breakdown

In 2018, 140 alerts concerning 32 Council of Europe member states were submitted to the Platform, confirming last year's conclusion of the wide geographic spread of the media freedom threats.

2018 alerts by levels

■ Level 1 (56 alerts, 40%) ■ Level 2 (84 alerts, 60%)

Levels

■ Out of the 140 alerts, 56 (40%) are of level 1, which covers the most severe violations to media freedom.

2018 alerts by sources of threat

■ Unknown (31 alerts, 22%)
 ■ State (80 alerts, 57%)
 ■ Non-state (29 alerts, 21%)

Sources of threat

■ In 80 alerts (57%), the state is the source of the threat. Of the remaining threats, 29 (21%) originate from a non-state actor, and 31 (22%) of them from an unknown source.

100. In January 2018, civil society groups in Switzerland close to the right-wing Swiss People's Party launched a national referendum to abolish public financing of SSR, the country's public broadcaster. However, in March, Swiss citizens voted overwhelmingly (by 71.6%) to maintain the license fee and SSR.

2018 alerts by categories

- Attacks on physical safety and integrity of journalists (35 alerts, 25%)
- Detention and imprisonment of journalists (17 alerts, 12%)
- Harassment and intimidation of journalists (34 alerts, 24%)
- Impunity (3 alerts, 2%)
- Other acts having chilling effects on media freedom (51 alerts, 37%)

Categories

■ Of the 140 alerts, 35 (25%) fall under the category of attacks on physical safety and integrity of journalists, 17 (12%) under detention and imprisonment, 34 (24%) under harassment and intimidation, three (2%) under impunity and 51 (37%) under other the category of acts having chilling effects on media freedom.

2018 alerts by status

- Resolved (14 alerts, 10%)
- Active (126 alerts, 90%)

Status

■ 14 alerts (10%) out of the 140 submitted in 2018 were also closed. In addition, six alerts from 2015, 15 alerts from 2016 and 21 from 2017 were closed, bringing up to 55 the total number of alerts closed in 2018.

2018 alerts with a state reply

- With a state reply (54 alerts, 39%)
- Without a state reply (86 alerts, 61%)

State replies

■ 54 alerts (39%) out of the 140 submitted in 2018 received a state reply. In addition, 17 state replies were received by the Secretariat concerning threats to media freedom reported in 2017, 8 concerning threats reported in 2016 and 9 concerning threats reported in 2015, bringing the number of replies received in 2018 up to a total of 72.

■ The proportion of state replies increased in 2018 in comparison to the previous year (+12%), which may be due in part to newly established response mechanisms established by certain member states. Nevertheless the 2018 rate of responses remains low comparing to the rate of responses received during the Platform's first year, when 68% of the alerts received a reply from the domestic authorities. In 2016 this number fell to 33%, and in 2017 to 26%.

■ In 2018, ten member states¹⁰¹ provided a response rate superior to 70%. This stands in sharp contrast to the situation in the countries which have not yet provided any response to the alerts submitted for their attention¹⁰².
